02 檜意森活村 (北門)
Hinoki Village (North Gate)

日治時期，檜町正是基於阿里山林業開發所建立的官方宿舍。因為建材多以阿里山檜木為主，使整個區域彷如檜木村，因此當時名為「檜町」，其後再改名「檜村里」。以日式傳統工法以及盡可能的原材料進行修復，目前保留下來29棟木構造歷史建築。這裡不僅是台灣最早的林業村，也是保存最完整、範圍最廣之日式官舍建築群。During the Japanese colonial period, "Hinoki Town" was built as a government official residence zone in response to the development of forestry in Alishan. The town was mostly built from Alishan's cypress wood, making the entire area resemble a cypress village. Thus, the Japanese named it "Hinoki Town," meaning "Cypress Town" in Japanese. The name was later changed to "Hinoki Village. The area was restored using traditional Japanese crafting techniques and original materials as much as possible. Currently, 29 historic wooden buildings have been preserved. This is not only the earliest forestry village in Taiwan, but also the most complete and extensive Japanese government official residence cluster still standing today.

The trail's entrance is near the Yuantan Ecological Park, while the trail ends near the Rueili Elementary School on County Highway 166. The two must-see spots along the Youth Ridge Trail are the Swallow Cliff and the Bat Cave. The rock wall of Swallow Cliff is about 40 meters wide and covered in neat, small holes. The horizontal stripes on the wall were formed by wind erosion. If you walk on the path below the cliff in the rainy season, it creates an impression of walking in a water curtain.
